Dear Stephen

I am sorry to have to write again regarding my patient and please understand that I am a GP with no detailed knowledge of electromagnetic hypersensitivity other than the information Mrs Simon has provided. My own searches show that it is a contentious subject with no firm evidence either way.

She has asked me to write to you to see whether there is still a possibility of removing the smart meter.

She tells me that an agreement was made on the 14th of January to try this but this has not happened yet.

Whatever the cause is, Simone suffers with significant symptoms which occur in the home and resolve outside - she has chest pain, headache, nausea, dizziness, and it causes significant stress and anxiety (on top of a diagnosed history of PTSD).

She sleeps in her car and feels estranged from her grandson and daughters and my only reason for writing is to try and find a way through.

If removing/ moving/ changing the meter does not help them at least we can rule that out.

She has told me that she is willing to pay her electricity bills in advance. If that will help.

She appears to be living in a constant state of anxiety and fear, particularly when she is in the house.

Again, please note I am not (and could not) say what is right or wrong (if anyone is at all for that matter). I am just trying to help my patient who is suffering.

Yours sincerely
