Our association aims to offer EHS people a rest in a white zone sanctuary for some weeks to recover from their exposure.

This way we meet lots of EHS people. I can assess that

- they are really suffering people, experiencing symptoms when they arrive
- some of them have even got homeless because they can no longer live in their highly exposed homes, and have to sleep in their cars in low exposed places
- after a while depending on the person (at least a few days, sometimes a few weeks) they are feeling better and their symptoms (headaches, tinnitus, neuromuscular trouble, cognitive trouble, ...) have eased or even disappeared but are sadly coming back when they are re-exposed.

As I am neither a scientists nor a health practitioner, I will not give any medical explanations but stick on my testimonial.

I hope this will convince your department of the reality of EHS and the urgent need to find solutions to help these people get on with their lives.

Sincerely yours,

François, chairman of the association.
