I am writing to the FCC to let you know of my experience with wireless technology. We put 4G WiFi in our home/business about 6 years ago. I don't remember exactly. Within a short period of time, I developed multiple trigger fingers and had to have surgery to release the contractures that I had. I didn't know at the time that it was related to our wireless internet. I did notice that my hands got stiff shortly after putting in the WiFi but had no idea it was from that. I thought perhaps it was because I was playing on my iPad too much.

I had surgery on both hands and released the contractures so that I could use my hands. A year or two later, I developed a lot of pain all over my body. I later went on a restricted diet in case it was from my diet. My pain at that time improved so I continued on playing with my iPad and watched full movies on it.

At some point, I suspected that my health issues might be from the WiFi when I learned how dangerous it was. I stopped using my iPad and only had the WiFi on when we had guests. Around 2017 I developed generalized weakness in both legs and both arms. I saw a neurologist over a two year period. He couldn't find anything wrong with me. All tests were negative. One day I sat down and thought about when it started and my other health issues. Once we hard wired our internet, I improved somewhat. In 2018 we were forced to sell our business and our home because I was no longer able to keep up with the amount of work that it took. We lost well over $100,000 in the sale of our home/business.

I had to stop going to the gym for exercise because my legs would get very weak after just 1 ½ laps walking around the track. I also noticed that when in the gym, my eyes would get blood shot and burn and tear. That was the only exercise I could do in the winter. I continue to be very weak. My husband has a smart phone and when he is home and has his phone on, I feel very sick. I've asked him not to leave it on all the time. He thinks I'm nuts. I no longer use a cell phone except for emergencies and it's not a smart phone. It's a less powerful cheapie. I can't get the internet on my cell phone that I know of. I never tried to.

Wal-Mart has Wi-Fi in their stores since they sell wireless technology. I noticed that when I go to Wal-Mart, if I stay longer than 5 minutes, I feel very sick and have to leave. If I stay away from wireless technology, my legs are better but I suspect I am still getting zapped in my neighborhood. I have 32 wireless networks within my neighborhood. I also have terrible brain fog so excuse my grammar and/or errors. Spell check helps. My hair has been falling out at a rapid rate as well.

I bought a gadget that is a special kind of light that is supposed to reduce EMF's. It was $750 for the least expensive model. I could use one in every room but cannot afford that many. It does seem to help so I spend most of the day in my room. Walking my dog in my neighborhood is a big struggle. I feel not too bad when I leave but very shortly tire just walking 2 blocks. I feel like I'm walking through a pool of deep water. I would like to move somewhere that has no wireless technology but that place does not exist. I am certain that I will never live as long as my mother who is 90. In the days that I could visit her in the nursing home, I couldn't stay long because they have WiFi.

I went with a friend to the hospital to talk to her husband's doctor and we spent 45 minutes there. My friend was shocked when we got up to leave. My legs were noticeably weak and floppy. They get like that when I'm in a building with WiFi. I have had a skin cancer since having WiFi. I treated it myself with natural treatments and it went away before the doctor could schedule surgery to remove it. I believe beyond a shadow of a doubt that if 5G is put in in our town that I will die from a cancer or from hypoxia. The WiFi affects how well I can breathe. It's like I'm underwater. I have warned our city of this fact, but unless others have the same problem, I assume my complaints will be ignored. I have received no response from the city. Our government really cares nothing about the people and that is obvious to me. The stress of the shutdown has also affected me negatively. If 5G can be hard wired all over the world, it may be safe but I doubt it. People will still be addicted to their phones. I can't be around anyone who has a cell phone glued to their hip which means I have to be alone most all the time. My life has been destroyed due to WiFi.

The last 3 years, I have had to use a wheel chair at the airport due to the severe weakness in my legs inside the airport and on the plane with WiFi.

I strongly object to the increase in wireless technology power. More people will be affected if that happens
