State: Arkansas

Name: Neil Manning

Occupation: I am a Retired Operating Engineer. I worked at a large shopping mall in Chicago in charge of all the mechanical and electrical equipment such as heating ventilation and air conditioning equipment and more.

Wireless Health Effects: I started to feel spaced out and dysfunctional at my job. I quit my job not knowing what was causing my symptoms and moved out to California in hopes of cleaner living with organic foods. I tried applying for jobs in California and I remember leaving an interview feeling completely disoriented not knowing where I parked my car and feeling like I was in an "altered state of consciousness". Later on I discovered that being in front of my computer screen caused me what Swedish scientists have coined as "screen dermatitis". Swedish scientist, Olle Johanssen found that some people are unable to sit in front of a screen (computer, TV etc.) without getting severe dry skin and very itchy rash. After 15 to 30 minutes on the computer I would get spaced out and completely disoriented and my skin would get dry and itchy with a rash.

Wireless technology has affected my life*:* I had always been physically fit and ate very healthily. Now, I can no longer hold down a job. I am unable to recreate or socialize and I spend most of my time housebound in order to feel myself again. I now live in Fairfield, Arkansas, a remote town with a population of 2300. I found a home here that I am able to tolerate. I have no money and I will never be able to relocate so I put up with a smart meter on my home and a cell tower that is in plain view on a hill about 1 mile away from my home. I do not own a computer or a television and have absolutely no wireless in my home. I've had advanced liver disease for 13 years now and had to be hospitalized for severe bleeding. My hospital stays are excruciating because of all the wireless but it's something I have to tolerate in order to get the medical attention I need for my liver.

Concerns for 5G: I have grave concerns about 5G and the possibility of imposing yet another wireless infrastructure on my deteriorating health. I find these wireless mandates extremely objectionable and unconstitutional.
