State: Idaho

Name: Susan Arima

Occupation: I have been an acupuncturist for 30 years.

Wireless Health Effects: I was literally burned by the wireless router installed in my office (2014). I finally decided to have my office set up for Wi-Fi, a router was placed on top of the computer tower which was located under my desk. Over the course of a week, the right side of my face started breaking out in what appeared to be a rash. It continued to worsen and by the seventh day, I felt toxic, dry, tired and "fried", I experienced fatigue, a dull heaviness in my head, tingling and numbness in my fingers and burning sensations on my ears and face. Once my WiFi router was turned off and I followed a protocol for eliminating radiation poisoning, the external burns were quick to heal, but the fatigue, headaches, and other symptoms took longer.

Wireless technology has affected my life: I continue to feel the buzzing, tingling in my fingers when I hold a smart phone and cannot be around Wi-Fi very long before my head start to feel heavy, starts pounding and get fatigued. When walking through Costco the other day, my fingertips would get shocked when I touched the grocery cart at certain places in the building. I avoid using WiFi as much as I can and use shielding materials whenever possible. I have a sign to turn off cell phones in my office, and cannot be in close proximity when multiple phones are out or my nervous system will get agitated.

Concerns for 5G: There are many silent sufferers of what I see will be a huge epidemic as more people's immune systems become compromised by their forced exposure to these wireless frequencies. As of yet, they are being misdiagnosed and treated for their myriad of symptoms but have yet to discover what the cause is. I am concerned that 5G will exacerbate current health issues to those who are already compromised and with a stronger frequency; many more will succumb to health problems.

Sincerely,

Susan Arima, Licensed Acupuncturist
