This began when I was helping my mother move from upstate New York to Bowling Green Kentucky. Not long after arriving within a week or so, I began to get to sick. Every day I would have a headache one running up my neck to the top of my head, and another headache that feels like tremendous pressure behind my eyes. I began to feel extreme nausea, muscle and connective tissue pain, severe spasms, fatigue, insomnia, anxiety, panic attacks, difficulty concentrating (brain fog). At first, because of the muscle connective tissue pain and spasms and the fatigue I thought I was having a flare up from Lyme's disease I've had in the past. I thought I would try and lay down try and get some rest and the Lyme symptoms would pass. As I laid in bed for a few days, it became a few weeks the symptoms had gotten at least 5 times worse and began having other symptoms my teeth hurt. Especially the one filling I have. I had constant ringing in my ears, I had a mild sore throat I had developed a stuffed nose and a cough. The brain fog had gotten so bad I thought I had Alzheimer's disease (something I'm familiar with as my father died from it) and as weeks turned into months, I got sicker and sicker. I could barely even think. No wonder with the smart meter 3 feet from me. Finally, my gut said get up and leave or you're going to die. I told my mother I'm leaving. She is sick herself and not wanting me to drive alone in my condition came with me. When I got back to New York I had pains in my kidneys, my sides, my stomach, chest pains and viral bronchitis. My mother spent days in the hospital, she had a heart attack and her kidneys weren't functioning properly. After being back in upstate New York for 5 weeks some of the symptoms lessened and thankfully my cognition was getting better. my mom was released from the hospital and she needed me to drive her back to Kentucky. Here's the real embarrassing part. I already knew how bad cell phones were. I rarely use one. I had done research on 5G and how bad it was. 5G hits your brain so hard you can't figure out what happened. I didn't think they had a 5G system there. Turns out AT&T had Bowling Green listed right behind South Bend Indiana as a pilot for 5G ZDNet which is fixed wireless 5G internet trial. (internet article AT&T fixed 5G fixed wireless trial in Bowling Green Indiana).

I'm back in upstate New York. Some of the more everyday extremely painful spasms, connective tissue and muscle pain isn't as bad. I struggle daily with pains in my gut, kidneys and flanks my memory has been devastating! Especially short-term memory!!! This is a technology that cannot be allowed. For those of us who can feel this right now, LISTEN eventually you're going to feel it too and I can guarantee you'll be saying we should have listened to the "canaries in the coal mine" THIS TECHNOLOGY IS CRIMINAL!!
