To Whom It May Concern:

My name is Kathy Carlisle. I have lived in New York City for 35 years and am a photographer and artist. In June 2017 I began experiencing distressing symptoms when walking in the city, taking public transit, and entering some building. These became increasingly rehabilitating, included vertigo, ringing ears, nausea, stinging face and eyes, aching muscles, pounding heart, chest pain, vibrating teeth, mental fog.

I felt off balance and dizzy when walking by WiFi kiosks recently installed up and down the Avenues and began to suspect my body was reacting to the intense build out of public and private WiFi throughout the city in 2016-17. In an online search I discovered a condition called microwave sickness or electro hypersensitivity, EHS, which corresponded to my experience. The cumulative load of microwave frequencies from WiFi a cell transmission clearly was too much for my sensitive body. As months passed and more wireless technology was installed, y symptoms worsened. I felt best in my apartment where modern, computer, and phone were hard wired, and the shared wall with an apartment with high WiFi transmission was shielded. The city I loved was being taken from me. Now, office buildings, restaurants, shops, museums, buses and subways, even parks, are off limits as combined WiFi and cell transmissions can be too intense to endure. Most distressing is I can no longer travel by plane.

4G cell technology from multiple providers is a significant part of the dangerous electro-smog in the city and elsewhere. It, combined with WiFi, has made life in the 4G world very difficult and unhealthy for me. Since developing EHS, also called rapid aging syndrome by researcher Magda Havas, my body is changing. I am truly aging rapidly. I have lost protective fat and tone throughout my body and have lost nearly half of my hair. M My circulation, digestion, and memory are impaired. After having good healthy most of my life, exercising and eating a healthy diet, this is an unbelievable, frightening situation.

To regain my life and healthy my only recourse is to move to a low radio frequency area. I must move as soon as I find a home and definitely before 5G is deployed. I could no function in or likely survive and environment with 5G ultra frequency wireless transmissions.

I grew up on a wheat farm on the High Plains of Nebraska and never guessed one day I might face the same disregard from government as the Cheyenne and Sioux who once roamed free over that unbroken prairie. Pleaser realize that those with EHS are the vanguard, waring you that unfettered wireless expansion is dangerous and, as many doctors warn and scientific studies prove, causes cumulative harm to humans, plants, and animals. Technological advancement is important, but must be wise and taken human health into account, not just for the financial well-being of the telecom industry which has been allowed to control the message far too long. Important research and international documents of warning have been ignored and dismissed due to bullying and obfuscation by Industry. Please study this issue carefully and vote to protect citizens, not industry.

Sincerely,

Kathy Carlisle
