Testimony of Charyl Zehfus WISCONSIN

I am very ill from Microwave Sickness. I am mostly in the closet about it. However, in the past my previous Doctor wrote a note that got an opt out from a transmitting water meter as they were installing them at my previous residence. I have been excused from jury duty due to that Doctor letter, as well.

They just put in wi-fi in the public areas of my building where I own the unit. I wrote and asked for an "off" switch. They said the telecom people did not have such a unit. So, my social activities in this building are pretty much gone. In my own unit, I experience horrible symptoms from what neighbors use above and below me, as well. Shielded clothing helps somewhat, but not enough.

I am looking to move, but not sure where. A nook of lower ground not in line with any cell tower paths or neighbors' equipment would probably work. I may end up in the woods with bears for my neighbors, but I am a jogger, and that does not sound idea.

I am not a complainer. But I will say that since 2010 the increasing wireless emissions have totally changed my life. What wireless has given me: chronic debilitating pain (NO pain prior to this pollution, and it subsides away from it); lost social life; lost marriage; difficulty visiting and being around the few family members I do have due to their locations or wireless use; anger (not an angry person by nature); seclusion; lack of energy; loss of concentration, appetite, sleep. Embarrassment (other people's assumptions this is a mental problem or simply thinking stress, which it is not)

I have 2 Masters degrees, several creative projects in process, am a former librarian with a rewarding, successful career behind me (I could NOT be employed in a library anymore if I was still in the work force).

I believe I am one of the "throwaway people," my term for all who experience damage from electro smog. That term occurred to me. The throwaway people come from all walks of life. Some have money, some don't. It affects people of all races, lifestyles and beliefs. It is a hidden population. These other groups (race, lifestyle) are getting lots of attention. But my "throwaway people" group is still in the shadows. Of course, every person is a "throwaway person" even if they do not feel what wireless is doing right now to their body.

Even scientists on the summit refer to "those people" who experience symptoms.
(As one of "those" people, I was appalled that one of the scientists toward the end of his interview was gung-ho about satellite 5G or other connection systems because it would be "lower power" connection. And he spoke about Li-Fi as a possibility IN buildings - which has NOT been safety tested either).
