For years, my daughter has had health issues around wireless and cell towers. She can't sleep near them and gets sick easily. I saw this happen for years and have tried to help her. I have to unplug everything in my house at night for wireless, and she still can only stay a few days due to being near cell towers that affect her health. I am very concerned about the millions of people who are affected by this, and more who will be in the future. To learn there has been no health studies, no safety standards and no new research being done for 30 years is horrifying. I am learning that other European countries take much bigger steps for health and safety and protecting the public. We need to do that right away, and all safety studies and rigorous third party unbiased work must be disclosed to the public at all times. It is our lives and we deserve to have safe, healthy places to be and the knowledge that whatever technology we use is studied, safe, and not a risk to our health or well being. For those who are most affected and sensitive, nothing has been done and they have been ignored. This must become a mainstream public health conversation now. Deeply concerned about what I have read and seen, and worried for children and the future.
